

Some people think animals don't have feelings. Well sure we do. So to prove it, here are some of our feelings.

My name is Bailey. I am a boy dog. I am also very playful. I love to play with my bright orange ball. My favorite game to play is fetch. After I get it I run around a few times to try to get my owner, Elyssa, to chase me so she can get the ball back. I think that is the most enjoyable thing in the world even though sometimes I spend a lot of time running around.

Another way I am playful is that I love to jump up on my owner. After I do that she usually pets me on the head and back. I love getting stroked on my back.

My owner sometimes says that I get a little irritating because I follow them onto the playhouse and they don't like. Well what can I say? I absolutely enjoy being the center of attention. Elyssa thinks that I am enjoying because when she and her sister try to go down the slide, I sniff their faces.

That was a few ways I am playful.

My name is Domino. I am a family member of Bailey. Our owner, Elyssa, told me that I am very loving. I love to rub against my owner. I think it is so soothing. It always makes me purr. Sometimes she pets me but other times she pushes me away. Sometimes I go back and get in her face again.

My name is Sugar Socks, another member of Bailey's family. People think I am lazy. Here are some reasons why.

I enjoy relaxing by laying at the edge of the couch. I am not one of those cats that lay around a lot. All I do is lay around. No one sees much of me because I hide away and fall asleep. There is nothing else to do.

I mostly ignore what everyone is saying because I don't really want to listen. My only interest is sleeping. Everything else is a waste of my time.

Now you see that animals do have feelings! Not just humans!
