If Animals Could Talk

Every day after school, I sit down with my dog Reese and tell her what I did that day. She is my best friend, my favorite one to talk to about my feelings, my friends, and everything else in my life. If animals could talk, I think that Reese would have interesting stories to tell me!

I think Reese would tell me how she started her day by checking out the backyard and sniffing around for something yummy to eat. She would probably tell me that she ate something really gross, which would make me mad because she always licks me on the face! Then Reese would tell me that she went inside and talked to my other dogs to see what was up with them. My oldest dog Scout is like the wise old man, and he would tell her to stay out of trouble and quit eating the walls and chewing up shoes. The next dog is Hershey, who is our family watchdog. He would tell her about all the squirrels, cats, spiders and other creatures he spotted at night while we were sleeping. My little sister's dog Boots is a tiny fluffy dog who is always jumping and yapping at Reese. She would probably be talking really fast and asking a lot of questions to bug Reese like little sisters always do.

After that, I think Reese would tell me she took a nap on the couch. Then she could tell me how the rest of her day was spent chasing squirrels, barking at the UPS man, and talking to the dogs in our neighbor's yard. I am always at school so it would be great if animals could talk so that Reese could tell me things that went on in her day and all of her hopes and dreams. The only bad thing about animals talking is that I tell Reese everything.. so I would have to teach her how to keep a secret!
